In the Developing World

Bóthar is the Third World development agency that specialises in the use of livestock. Each dairy goat or dairy heifer that we send from Ireland and each flock of laying hens that we donate to the Third World gives a whole family an opportunity to work with their animals and in the passage of time, lift themselves out of their destitution. Since we started operation in 1991 we have developed livestock programmes in 25 Third World countries. In all cases the recipient families are required to pass on the first female offspring of their animal so that another family can also benefit. The original family can keep all subsequent stock bred from their own animal.

Of course, we realise that the work we are doing is just a drop in the ocean by comparison with the need that exists in the Third World. But, each family that we set up in a micro farming unit allows that family to provide for their own future, to feed their children and look forward to a future of relative comfort.

I hope you find happiness in the fact that a poor family's life in the developing world has been changed forever in your name.

On behalf of the families you have helped thank you
